Philly Tech Week shows city is a technology hub

Philly 2.0. The City of Brotherly Love is not trying to be Silicon Valley. It doesn't have to be.

The circa-2007 Christopher Wink was a Temple student determined to work his byline into the pages of the Inquirer on a daily basis. "And then our industry took an interesting turn," he said Monday.

In 2009 Wink cofounded the technology news website, TechnicallyPhilly.com, with Temple friends Brian James Kirk and Sean Blanda.

"Made sense for us to start something on our own back in 2009," Wink said, "and technology and technology business was not only an interesting subject matter but one that really had promise in Philadelphia."

The circa-2014 Wink, 28, is still determined to build on that promise, which translates into showcasing the city in a venue beyond the black and white pages of a daily newspaper.

Philly Tech Week, now in its fourth iteration, is a weeklong celebration of technology held across the city April 4-12. The event kicked off last weekend with Tetris on the Cira Centre.

This collection of seminars, roundtables and gatherings is a platform to showcase Philadelphia's tech scene as well as bring innovators from across the country to the country's fifth largest city.

"I think it reflects a growth in the tech sector in general," said Luke Butler, chief of staff to the deputy mayor for economic development. "The fact that this has grown year after year is a great signal of strength to Philadelphia's tech sector."

But can Philly be the next Silicon Valley? Wink said it can't and shouldn't compete with the heavy hitters.

"We want everyone to succeed and I don't want to hold anyone here. I want people to choose to be here."

What's next?

The future of Technical.ly Philly

Around late 2010 and early 2011, the team decided it needed to reach a larger audience. It traded TechnicallyPhilly.com for Technical.ly, which also covers the tech scenes in Baltimore and Brooklyn.

Wink said the larger goal now is to connect with the cities along the Amtrak train corridor. Philly would be the epicenter. "The idea that Philadelphia is, after all, in the middle of one of the world's densest, best transited, best connected, most relevant technology and innovation hub."

Aged 11. Police seek answers in shootings

As of press time, no arrests have been made in the shootings of two 11 year olds over the weekend, leaving one child dead and one injured.

Kashia Crawford, 11, was playing basketball on the 1500 block of North Gratz Street when he was shot in the hip Sunday around 4 p.m. Police believe he was caught in the crossfire between gunmen. The shooter was seen driving a blue Mercury Grand Marquis.

Jamara Stevens, 11, died Saturday after her 2-year-old brother accidentally fired a .357 Magnum at her around 10 a.m. Police found gunpowder residue on the brother's hand. They are seeking the mother's boyfriend, believed to have left the gun at the house. SAM NEWHOUSE

Pair pleaded guilty in murder of man for Mac

Robbery gone wrong. Two men killed an elderly veteran in a home invasion robbery.

Sean Johnson and Aaron Pitts both received long sentences. / PPD

Sean Johnson, 20, was sentenced to 35 to 70 years, and Aaron Pitts, 22, was sentenced to 20 to 40 years, after both pleaded guilty Monday to murder and robbery charges for the death of Joseph Fleming, 80.

"I understand what was done was unreasonable and unacceptable and that's why I've accepted responsibility," Johnson said before sentencing.

Johnson was the shooter and Pitts was lookout man when, around 2:41 p.m. on May 17, 2012, Johnson sneaked into the basement of Fleming's home near 67th Street and Woodland Avenue.

Johnson, who lived with his aunt around the corner, admitted that as he came up from the basement, he heard noises and fired a .38-caliber revolver once through the door, striking Fleming in the abdomen.

He opened the door and shot Fleming again in the abdomen.

Then, Johnson took Fleming's Macbook and walked out the front door, where Pitts was waiting for him.

Fleming, a Korean War veteran who was 6 feet tall and 217 pounds at the time of his death, clung to life for more than a month through eight surgeries before succumbing to the bullet wounds and other medical complications, dying on June 22, 2012.

Fleming's wife, children and grandchildren attended the sentencing for this murder, which "ripped a hole through the fabric of the community," as Judge Rosemarie Defino put it.

"You opened the door and shot again. That is gigantic," Defino told Johnson. "He lived through 80 years and he was taken down by you, a 19-year-old who wanted a laptop."

Quoted

"They made a choice that has changed all our lives forever — not just our family, but their family as well. They decided to steal something. And they did. They stole my father's life."

SEPTA waiting on union to accept 'final offer' deal

Will they strike?
The union has said it won't, but agreement hasn't yet been reached.

SEPTA officials have put their final offer on the table. Now, it's the union's turn.

As of press time, Transport Workers Union Local 234 have yet to further negotiate its contract with SEPTA or accept the offer, which SEPTA spokeswoman Jerri Williams said was "sweetened."

The offer now is for two years, with a wage hike of 2 percent the first year and, in the second, a 3 percent increase. Workers would also have to contribute an additional 1 percent of health benefits, Williams said.

The union had previously proposed a 5 percent per year wage increase with no additional contributions to insurance costs. So far, SEPTA hasn't heard from the union.

"We basically have offered most of what the union had requested," Williams said. "And so, we are labeling this as our final offer. We are ... waiting, willing, able and ready to continue negotiating."

On Sunday, Willie Brown, Local 234's president, had publicly stated the union would not strike once midnight Monday hit. But SEPTA said they have not heard directly on that.

"When we'll hear from them, we don't know," Williams said.

Negotiations

Off the table now is SEPTA's proposal to change the workers' pension plan that would have required all new hires to be "released from the defined benefits plan," said Williams, and be placed into a separate employee-funded plan.

Supreme Court declines free speech, gay marriage case

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday declined to consider whether a New Mexico photography company had free speech grounds to refuse to shoot the commitment ceremony of a same-sex couple.

The court's refusal to intervene means an August 2013 New Mexico Supreme Court decision against the company remains intact. Albuquerque-based Elane Photography had said its free speech rights under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution should be a valid defense to the state's finding that it violated the New Mexico Human Rights Act. The law, similar to laws in 20 other U.S. states, bans discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. REUTERS

Supreme Court won't take an early look at NSA spying case

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday turned down a long-shot request for a ruling on whether the U.S. government's gathering of Americans' phone records is unlawful.

The justices' refusal to intervene means the case will go forward in the appeals court, as scheduled.

Plaintiffs Larry Klayman and Charles Strange had said the issue was so important the high court should not wait for a Washington federal appeals court to rule in the case concerning the National Security Agency.

The Supreme Court will likely be asked to hear the case after the appeals court issues its ruling. REUTERS

Trial. 'I'm scared to sleep,' tearful Pistorius tells court

His voice trembling with emotion, Oscar Pistorius took the witness stand in his own defense on Monday, saying the Valentine's Day shooting of his girlfriend last year had left him sleepless, terrified and plagued by nightmares.

Pistorius apologized to the mother of model Reeva Steenkamp, saying he had fired four times through a toilet door at his luxury Pretoria home in the belief he was defending her from an intruder.

Steenkamp was hit by at least three rounds, one of which — to the head — killed her almost instantly, the court has heard.

"I was simply trying to protect Reeva," Pistorius told the Pretoria High Court at the start of his testimony. Reeva's mother June Steenkamp, sitting stony-faced in the packed public gallery, bowed her head.

The 27-year-old testified he had been on antidepressants and sleeping pills because of his disturbed state of mind since the shooting.

"I'm scared to sleep. I have terrible nightmares about things that happened that night," he said.

He recounted one occasion when he woke up so scared in the middle of the night that he crawled into a cupboard before calling his sister, who came around to sit with him.

"I wake up in a complete state of terror to the point that I would rather not sleep," he said, adding that his faith had helped pull him through. REUTERS

An Australian ship searching for a missing Malaysia Airlines jetliner has picked up signals consistent with the beacons from aircraft black box recorders, in what search officials said on Monday was the most promising lead yet in the monthlong hunt.

The U.S. Navy's "towed pinger locator" connected to an Australian ship picked up the signals in an area some 1,040 miles northwest of Perth, which analysis of sporadic satellite data has determined as the most likely place Boeing 777 went down.

"I'm much more optimistic than I was a week ago," Angus Houston, head of the Australian agency coordinating the search, told a news conference in Perth, while cautioning that wreckage needed to be found for a confirmation.

If the signals can be narrowed further, an autonomous underwater vehicle will be sent to find wreckage on the sea floor to verify the signals, said Houston, who noted that the potential search area was 2.8 miles deep, the same as the vehicle's range.

Quoted

"We are now in a very well-defined search area, which hopefully will eventually yield the information that we need to say that MH370 might have entered the water just here." Houston

The black boxes record cockpit data and may provide answers about what happened to the Malaysia Airlines plane, which was carrying 227 passengers and 12 crew when it vanished off radar on March 8 and flew thousands of miles off its Kuala Lumpur-to-Beijing route. Authorities have not ruled out mechanical problems as a cause of the plane's disappearance. REUTERS

A 9-year-old girl was missing and presumed dead on Monday after being swept away in flash floods triggered by severe storms in Mississippi, while more than 100 people were rescued from deluged apartment buildings in Alabama, authorities said.

Divers in Yazoo City, Miss., searched culverts and ditches for the girl, who was last seen on Sunday night playing in floodwaters near her home, said Joey Ward, director of the local emergency management agency.

The rescue effort was reclassified as a recovery on Monday as thunderstorms battered parts of the Southeast, bringing threats of hail and damaging winds. REUTERS

If you're lucky, you recently got a sweet paycheck from the government — or you'll be getting one soon. Should you save it? Take a vacation? As it turns out, the average American is a lot more responsible than you may think. According to a Bankrate.com poll, 84 percent of Americans will use that extra dough to pay off debt. Twenty-eight percent will put it in savings or invest it, 26 percent will use it to pay current bills and only 7 percent will spend it on a vacation. EMILY LAURENCE

Budgeting. A new survey shows a shift in the way couples think about shared finances

Some couples are happier not putting everything in one piggy bank. COLOURBOX

First comes love, then comes the joint banking account, right? Not necessarily, according to a new survey conducted by TD Bank.

The bank surveyed 1,000 Americans who are either married or living with their significant other and found that the 42 percent who have joint accounts still maintain their own personal account.

The results show the shift in the way Millennials — people ages 18 to 34 — are thinking about money and relationships. Many couples have one joint account for shared expenses, but still use their individual accounts for personal spending.

Thirty-eight percent of those surveyed who maintain their own individual account reported that they did it to maintain their independence, while 20 percent said their individual accounts were for emergency situations.

Sixteen percent said it was just easier that way, while 7 percent cited privacy as the main factor. EMILY LAURENCE

Creative ways city dwellers make ends meet

Making it happen. Janice is reversing the stereotype that young single moms cannot succeed.

We all know living in a city is expensive. Our series shows how people make it work. This week, meet Janice, a 21-year-old single mom who is working and attending college full-time.

You work in addition to being a junior at Temple University. What's your job?
Last summer, I studied away in New York City, and it was really successful for me. Now, my job is only part time. Right now I'm more concerned with finishing school, so this is what I can do for money.

You're also a single mom.
Yes. My daughter is 5.

The stats

Janice Marie Durrant

Age: 21
Residency: North Philadelphia
Lives with: Her 5-year-old daughter
Number of jobs: One, and attends school full-time

Janice takes classes while her daughter is in school. / PROVIDED

Q&A

Do you think people have any misconceptions about what it means to be a young single mother?
Yes, and that's why I blog about it. It's [possible] to be a single mom and still [be successful], but it's something our society doesn't often see.

Visit Janice's blog at janicemdurrant.com

She goes to school while I'm at class. I pick her up from school every day except Tuesdays, which is when she goes to a non-profit organization where she gets to take singing and dance classes.

Were you ever tempted not to go to college and just start working?
Yes! Probably just yesterday. It's a lot of work. I still perform as a regular student. I want people to say I get the job done because I'm a hard worker, and I'm a mom.

Switch it up and go far

Mixed bag. Linear career paths are hard to find, grads.

Blame the liberal arts: College students today are curious, multitalented and have a cadre of diverse interests. This is wonderful while in school, but it can mean your professional life, once you begin it, will be full of variation. If you shift from job to job, trying on different positions and sampling a variety of industries, you may be sabotaging your hireability — that is, unless you have a strategy to navigate your professional mobility through job transitions to leapfrog your career.

Job mobility

In a new study from The University of California at Berkeley, researchers found that freelancers who demonstrated a long-term work commitment were most likely to be hired.

After examining millions of candidate profiles on an online job site, Professor Ming D. Leung of the UC Berkeley Hass School of Business found that applicants whose work history demonstrated a number of similar positions were at a distinct advantage over the competition.

On the other hand, Dr. Leung discovered that freelancers who remained in one position for a long time or who took on various but dissimilar positions were perceived as less attractive to employers on the site.

Put differently, this university study hints that trying on different jobs is preferable and may give you an edge, as long as you stick within a single field.

Where you come in

Contract gigs, side hustles, freelancing — all may appear as a series of horizontal moves on a very long résumé. But working hard on this kind of career-in-progress can result in an impressive, broad and diverse project portfolio, and produce an extensive network of professional contacts. Those are two big pluses for you — especially if you're multitalented.

"Not everyone's path makes sense as a vertical trajectory," observes Robin Madell, and it's possible to "move up" by moving over, or even by stepping right off the ladder every once in awhile. Career shifts that seem random might be the path for a passionate student like you. SIDNEYEVE MATRIX

Zigzag

Planning ahead

Other experts and studies have confirmed that zigzagging your way through a series of short-term assignments isn't detrimental to your overall progress — if you do it right. Thinking strategically, those short-term positions can actually help you develop transferable skills and demonstrate your professional flexibility and openness to change.

In fact, what may at first seem to be a step backward may actually be the key to fast-track your career progression.

Describing his own experience in Harvard Business Review, Alex McClung observed that, "the sideways moves accelerated my career by five years or more each time," concluding that "sideways turns into a slingshot." In fact, your career "needs to be horizontal" if you want to get ahead, HBR author Ron Ashkenas insists, because in-demand talent means having a variety of skills.

Student osteopaths have a new leader in town at Philly's College of Osteopathic Medicine. Dr. Jay Feldstein, who graduated from the school in 1981, will be taking the place of Dr. Matthew Schure, who is retiring.

Dr. Feldstein is leaving a position as the president of Pennsylvania managed care plans at AmeriHealth Caritas, where he oversaw the plans of more than 700,000 at-risk members in the Northeast.

"I am truly humbled by the opportunity to build on the legacy of PCOM's history and mission," Feldstein says in a statement. "This is a dream come true both professionally and personally."

Osteopathy follows a holistic philosophy. It's projected that there will be 100,000 DO's practicing by 2020. METRO

The worst dressed at the ACM awards

When celebrities go a little bit country, a lot can go wrong. Here are the five celebrities who turned the most heads at the Academy of Country Music awards on Sunday night — and not in a good way. Blipp the icon in the upper left to see our best dressed picks. EMILY LAURENCE

The worst-dressed

1 Stripper heels, a baby blue prom dress and a flashy silver belt are three things that just don't belong on a red carpet, even at an event presented by the Academy of Country Music. Poor Kacey Musgraves. Someone get her a stylist, stat.

2 "The Voice" alum Rae-Lynn is new at this whole red carpet game, so hopefully her next attempt will be a little, er, appropriate. Feathers and ankle straps do not a style star make.

3 If you glance quickly, it looks like Miranda Lambert showed up nude. Ironically, once you notice she is clothed, it's hard not to look at the part of her that's covered up the least: that bountiful cleavage.

4 Shakira was there to debut her new song with Blake Shelton, "Medicine." The singer is usually right on the money when it comes to style, but this dress — let's just say it — it's trashy. And not even like "Coal Miner's Daughter" trashy, but like "Mistress of the Night" trashy.

5 Oh Shawna Thompson. That poppy-covered tulle dress was a good idea in theory, but in actuality, the overall effect is too much. It's just too much.

Nonfiction. Are these sisters the most scandalous feminists ever?

"The Scarlet Sisters: Sex, Suffrage and Scandal in the Gilded Age" will surprise you in how shockingly Victoria Woodhull and Tennessee "Tennie" Claflin acted in the name of feminism, before feminism was even a term. These women were truly ahead of their time.

"They were considered tramps and outsiders, and they were just written out of the women's movement," author Myra Macpherson tells us. "But they were fearless. ... The sisters were speaking out about violence and rape in marriages and the treatment of women." Victoria and Tennie weren't afraid to talk about sex, marriage or even abortion.

Macpherson has been reporting on feminism and the women's rights movement since the '70s, and says while there are women today acting fearlessly, as Victoria and Tennie did, we might not be paying enough attention. "I think there are some very strong women today who are speaking out. My main concern is that the younger women just don't understand that it might all be taken away, because they take it for granted," she says.

One of the things that gets Macpherson excited about modern feminism is the ability of a single tweet or blog post to spark something. "The real question is, how do you galvanize women to do this?" she asks. "We just have to get women excited about it, and I think maybe then there will be some sort of revolution." EMILY LAURENCE

Author Myra Macpherson has been reporting on the women's movement since the 1970s. / PROVIDED

On feminism today

Still not equals

Though much has changed since the days of the Scarlet sisters, Macpherson still has strong ideas about what the women's rights movement still needs to accomplish. "No. 1, with absolute clarity, is equal pay for equal work. This continues to happen, and if women can't have economic growth, they can't be independent. There's been way too much emphasis on the 'mommy wars' and how women can have it all. Many women have to work; they don't have the luxury of choice," she says. "We need more women leaders and in politics. Given the fact that we are over 50 percent of the population, half the Senate should be comprised of women. And when that happens, there is going to be an enormous change."

3 Adventures in Roatan

ALL PHOTOS MEREDITH ENGEL, METRO

Destinations.
Soak up the scene, and the sun, in Honduras.

A tranquil island off the coast of Honduras, Roatan boasts the best of both the Caribbean and Central American cultures. Whether you want to experience the colorful local scene or just engage in a little (or a lot) of R&R, you can do both in this fascinating yet undiscovered destination.

Snorkel around a sunken ship

Legend has it that a ship called The Snigg was coming from Belize, missed the entrance to the channel and sank in the reef. Rent gear with Mike at Black Pearl Divers (www.blackpearldivers.com) and explore The Snigg for yourself. The boat sits in shallow water, so it's hard not to be overwhelmed. Once you take it all in, though, poke around and see how an abundance of fish and coral have made the vessel part of their habitat.

Where to stay: This excursion is only open to guests at Las Verandas (www.las-verandas.com), which had a soft opening last year. The sprawling property is part of Pristine Bay Resort, a larger development. At Las Verandas, you'll wake up to the waves lapping outside your beach-front villa. Start your day or end your night with a dip in your villa's own private pool. Into golf? The Pete Dye-designed course is ranked No. 1 in Honduras. On your first night, you may be tired from traveling, so take it easy and dine at the property's Las Pergolas restaurant. The produce comes from Blue Harbor Tropical Arboretum, a bustling hydroponic farm on the island.

Beach it on your own private island

Hop a ferry to Pigeon Cay, a private white-sand island, for a day of undisturbed relaxation. Before you head out, swing by a gas station (yes, you read that right) to pick up a baleada for lunch on the beach. It's like a Honduran take on a breakfast burrito: eggs, chorizo, beans, avocado, cheese and sour cream wrapped in a tortilla. The locals eat them at all times of the day.

Where to stay: For a truly off-the-grid experience, book a stay at Mango Creek Lodge (www.mangocreeklodge.com). Welcoming managers DD and Doc run the small group of waterfront huts that boast just the necessities for the perfect warm-weather vacation: a bed, a bathroom and a hammock.

MEREDITH ENGEL

Get down and dirty on a dune buggy

The guides leading the Sand Blasters Dune Buggy Tour (www.roatanmjtours.com) are knowledgeable and friendly, but the real star of their show is Panchita, their domesticated pet monkey who will happily sit on your shoulder if you'd like. Sand Blasters' go-carts look like they would easily roll over, but are surprisingly stable. And for good reason: Your first course takes you up rocky mountains that don't have roads. From there, you'll traverse the jungle, a mud pit (we suggest wearing clothes you won't mind leaving behind) and the private Palmetto Beach, which only the locals really know to visit. Rinse off in the crystal-clear water before the tour ends.

Where to stay: The tour will bring you to eco-friendly Palmetto Bay Plantation (www.palmettobayplantation.com), a resort that, like Mango Creek, also has private huts. Hit the outdoor restaurant for a banana smoothie and to take in the view. Does it look familiar? "Temptation Island" filmed there in the early 2000s.

You'll need goggles and a bandana for your dune buggy ride.

PLUS

More info

1 Getting there: American Airlines flies to Roatan from Miami on Saturdays, Mondays and Wednesdays; it flies from Dallas/Ft. Worth on Saturdays.

2 Where to eat: At Jack's Harbor View Grill (www.facebook.com/jacksharborviewgrill), Jack Mitchell infuses flavors from his South Carolina upbringing into his steaks and fish.

3 Bring this home: The banana rum cake from Roatan Rum Company (www.roatanrumcompany.com) will give your friends a taste of your island adventures.

What childhood looks like around the world

What does a little girl in Malawi love more than anything? What toy brings a huge smile to a boy's face in Fiji? Do kids in Morocco love Hot Wheels as much as kids in the United States? Photographer Gabriele Galimberti and journalist Ben Machell set out on a mission to answer these questions and more, documenting children all over the world with their favorite things. The beautiful result is "Toy Stories," out now.

The book's 54 photos show what childhood means, near and far. It took three years for Galimberti and Machell to capture these moments. To see three photos from the book, including this one here, Blipp the image in the top left corner of the page. EMILY LAURENCE

Rich? Founders wanted (only) your vote

Re: 'McCutcheon decision equals corruption of free speech in America' (Metro, April 7) In answer to the question by a letter writer, did the founders want government limited to the rich, the answer is; yes, they did. At that time, voting rights were limited to male property owners. Senators were appointed by state governors and the Senate was to choose the president. The founders felt that only those with a financial interest in the nation should be allowed to take part in its governance, i.e. taxpayers.

Torture in the name of US freedom

Re: 'Democrat Pelosi says Former VP Cheney set tone for CIA interrogation practices' (Metro, April 7) Shame on Rep. Nancy Pelosi and Sen. Dianne Feinstein, who in my opinion do not love this country and who are more sympathetic to terrorists than the 3,000 lives that were lost on Sept. 11. And as for the brutal interrogation techniques — whatever it takes to ensure the safety of this country. Tough times need tough measures.

EAGLES SILENCE SPEAKS LOUDER THAN WORDS

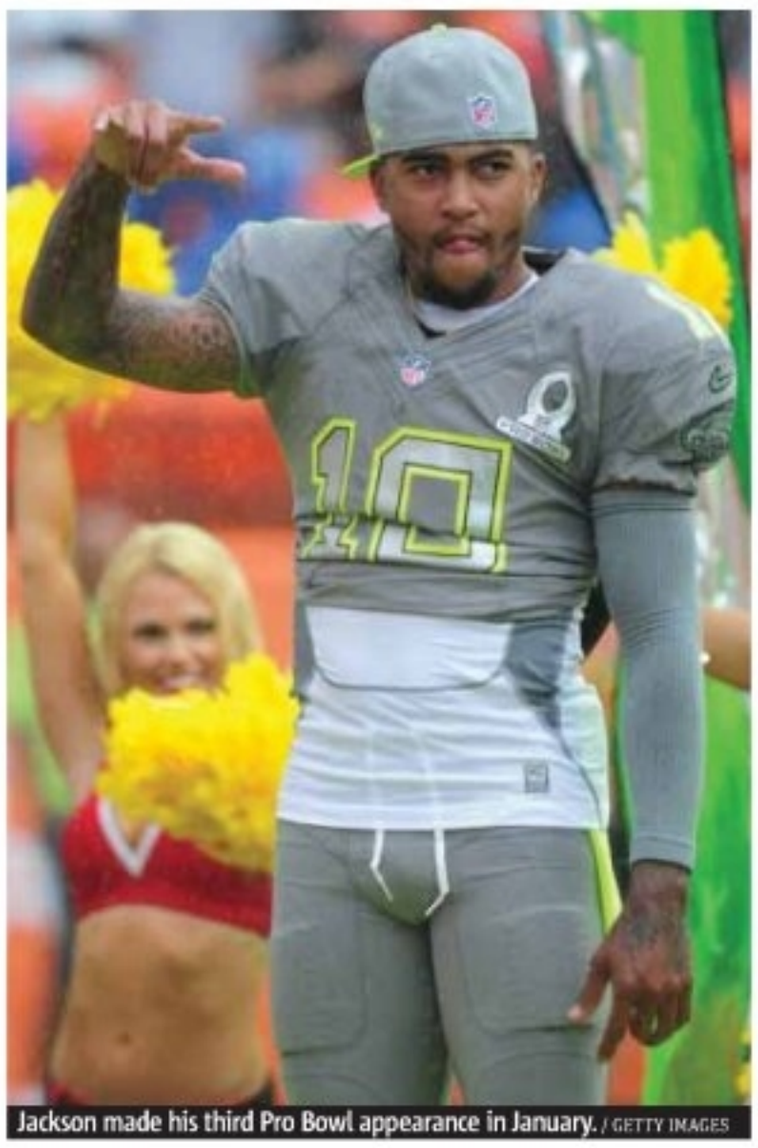
After 10 days of endless talk, the real story of DeSean Jackson's sudden departure from Philadelphia is what is not being said. So far, no Eagles player — not one — has offered a single word of public support for him, and coach Chip Kelly has gone into hiding.

Why the silence from the people who know Jackson the best? Well, it's like Mom told you many years ago: If you have nothing good to say, say nothing. Those who know Jackson have nothing good to say.

What has emerged from the loud public conversation is an ugly picture of a player whose talents on the field were dwarfed by his selfishness off it. It is no coincidence that the only people lamenting Jackson's departure are the fans, who didn't have to endure his childish behavior behind the scenes.

Jackson was an outcast in the locker room, and a major problem for the coaches. The accounts of insubordination, including tantrums directed at teammates and Kelly, have the ring of truth, as does the allegation that he was more concerned about his image than his team.

Even when he was supposed to be on his best behavior in the days just before and after he signed with Washington, Jackson came across as a grandstanding phony, waving off fair questions and lapsing into tired clichés until his big ESPN tell-all session last Friday — a laughable, woe-is-me account that ignored most of the pertinent questions.



Jackson made his third Pro Bowl appearance in January. / GETTY IMAGES

Quoted

"It's like Mom told you many years ago: If you have nothing good to say, say nothing. Those who know Jackson have nothing good to say."

For example, if Jackson was such a positive influence, why didn't his former coaches — Andy Reid in Kansas City and Marty Mornhinweg in New York — make any effort to sign him? Why did he visit no other team before signing with the Redskins? Were there any other clubs bidding for him?

With so many enticing sub-plots to the Jackson story — the gang ties, the mysterious burglary, his affiliation with rap artists — it has been easy to ignore the simple truth that Jackson's negative behavior was deemed more significant than 82 catches and 1,332 yards.

Let those football numbers sink in for a second. He had career highs in catches and yards, scored nine touchdowns, was a major threat on punt returns — and was worth absolutely nothing on the trade market.

When Jackson was released, everyone in Philadelphia was buzzing over the "smoking gun," the juicy story that would emerge to explain this astounding decision. The truth is, the smoking gun has been right in front of us all along. It is Jeremy Maclin, a partner at the wide-receiver position for five years, the biggest benefactor of Jackson's intimidating presence on the offense.

Maclin was asked the night before Jackson was cut for a response to all the rumors surrounding his teammate. The veteran receiver could not form a sentence. He stumbled and stammered and basically said nothing. Every one of his teammates have followed suit since the release. Chip Kelly has denied repeated requests for a comment.

And that's the final twist in this DeSean Jackson saga. After so much speculation, so much conversation, the real story is the silence.

Cataldi. Moyer in booth has viewers missing Wheeler and Sarge

Jamie Moyer was a cerebral, pensive control pitcher during his 24-year career in the big leagues, so it should come as no surprise that he is not exactly electrifying the broadcast booth in his first days as the Phillies' new color commentator. In fact, he is doing the impossible right now. He is making people miss Chris Wheeler.

JAMIE MOYER
GETTY IMAGES

It is no fault of Moyer that he finds himself in this ridiculous situation, a rookie promoted to the big leagues with absolutely no experience behind a microphone. Comcast made the move after ending Wheeler's 37-year career as the ultimate Phillies apologist. Why the broadcast giant chose Moyer over a far more enthralling and experienced option like Mitch Williams is unimaginable.

But it is not really surprising. For as long as sports has been broadcast, the hiring of announcers has always been a curious exercise. More times than not, the job goes to a favored son, a friend, rather than the best listen. Even though that voice is a conduit between the team and the fans, great color commentators like Richie Ashburn or current radio analyst Larry Anderson are more a product of luck than design.

In a city like Philadelphia, which relishes humor and candor, Moyer will never ascend to the level of Ashburn or Anderson. Sadly, he will probably not become as interesting as the annoying but charming Gary Matthews, who also lost his job in the offseason purge. Moyer is the one thing you cannot be in our city — boring.

The Jamie Moyer experiment has begun. Have the Red Bull handy.

Idle thoughts

- Two years ago, many of us were wondering if Chase Utley would ever look like Chase Utley again. Well, despite a chronic knee condition and the usual issues associated with being 35, he appears to be back in his prime, playing the game the right way.
- As the Flyers endure another late-season tailspin, is it too soon to ask how many times we have to watch this same tired movie? There will be no happy endings for our hockey team until chairman Ed Snider retires. So retire, Ed. Please.
- Bill Belichek watched tape of Patrick Chung butchering the safety position for the Eagles last year and saw something we didn't, because the New England coach brought him back to the Patriots last week. After that awful season, Chung got another job. What a country.
- When the Milwaukee Brewer fans gave certified cheater and liar Ryan Braun a prolonged standing ovation last week, they proved once again that the Midwest is home of the stupid.

Papelbon only one who doesn't think he's finished

All that remains of Jonathan Papelbon's once-intimidating array of unique qualities is his ornery personality. Gone are his blistering 97-mph fastball, his knee-buckling splitter and his knack for saving close games with a sneer. In other words, Papelbon is the only person left in baseball who doesn't realize he's done.

Papelbon / GETTY IMAGES

Papelbon's latest misadventure unfolded last Wednesday, when he melted down both on the mound and in the clubhouse while blowing a save in Texas. First, he allowed eight of nine batters to reach base in turning a 3-1 lead into a 4-3 loss, and then he questioned new manager Ryne Sandberg's strategy on the decisive play.

When Sandberg pulled the infield in with runners at the corners and one out in a 3-2 game, he was making a statement about his declining closer. The manager was saying he had no faith that Papelbon could get a strikeout when the team needed it the most. He was saying Papelbon is finished as an elite ninth-inning pitcher.

Now comes the tough part. Since Papelbon insists he cannot pitch as effectively in non-save situations, there is really no logic to having a $13-million-a-year set-up man with no fastball and a bad attitude. In fact, it shouldn't be long now before there's no good reason to keep him on the team at all.

Ruben Amaro Jr. has made some monumental mistakes in his six years as GM, and Papelbon's historic $51 million contract now stands as his biggest gaffe. How long will it take for Amaro to cut his losses, write a massive check, and send Papelbon on his way?

Of course — given his own tenuous status — if Amaro waits much longer, it might not be his decision to make.

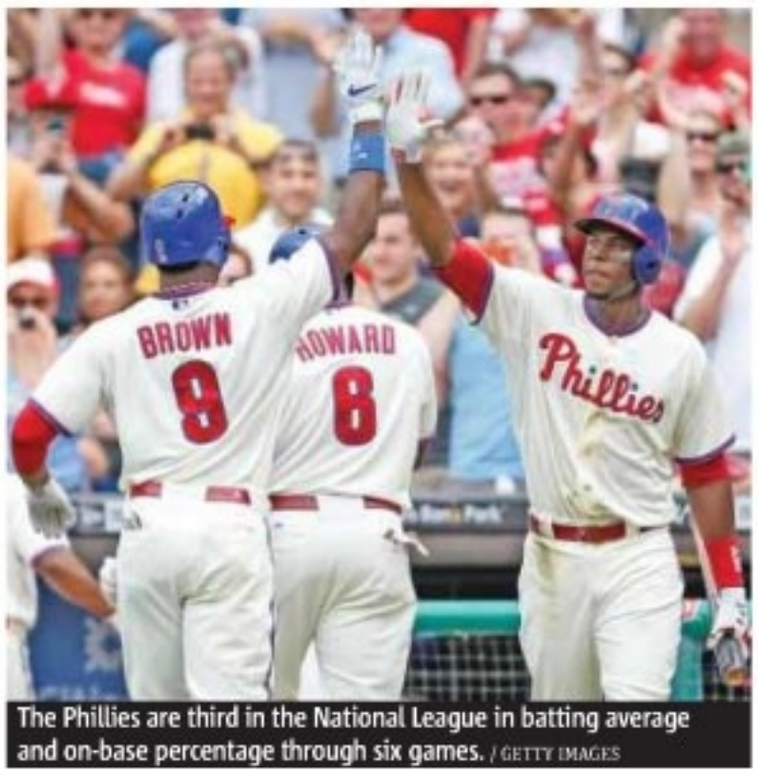
MLB. Phillies start 10-game homestand Tuesday with Brewers



The Phillies are third in the National League in batting average and on-base percentage through six games. / GETTY IMAGES

It took 24 hours longer than expected, but the Phillies home opener is finally here.

With the Brewers in town for a trio of games, the first pitting Kyle Kendrick against former Phillie Kyle Lohse.

Lohse, who played in Philadelphia in 2007, has a career 2.98 ERA against his old club. Kendrick is coming off an impressive start Wednesday in Texas, allowing one run in seven innings.

The Phillies offense and bullpen will be the key factors in this one however, with the red-hot offense a little cooler after a 8-3 loss in Chicago Sunday.

"I think we're pitching pretty good right now, scoring some runs, scoring enough," Kendrick said. "The first day in Chicago we scored seven. That should be plenty. So hopefully we can keep it going."

Milwaukee got off to a 4-2 start with Aramis Ramirez red hot, collecting 11 hits in his first 25 at bats. EVAN MACY

Flyers win with balanced attack

NHL. The Flyers boast six skaters with over 20 goals.

Brayden Schenn had two goals to bring his total to 20 for the season, the highest in his career. / GETTY IMAGES

If you really want to breakdown the Flyers this season, you should look past the standings.

Sure, Philadelphia (40-29-9, 89 points) is in a tight battle for playoff position (and still needs to clinch a berth), but the team appears to have all the tools necessary to turn it on and make a run at a Stanley Cup, assuming they can earn at least four points in their final four games.

"Playing Florida, I watched them today before our game and they're a dangerous team right now," Flyers head coach Craig Berube said. "They play with a lot of confidence and move the puck well, they have a lot of young players who skate well. We just have to go down there in the right mindset and we will be OK."

Once they clinch a playoff spot, the rest of the Eastern Conference will have to contend with six 20-goal scorers (possibly seven if Vincent Lecavalier nets one more), led by Wayne Simmonds and Claude Giroux with 26 and 25 respectively.

The widely distributed offensive attack also has 15 different skaters with double-digit assists (Giroux is fourth in the NHL with 54).

"It means we have good balance," Berube said of his wide collection of weapons. "We have depth in scoring."

Things seemed to open up for the Flyers Sunday night, following a stretch of four straight defeats, Philadelphia was able to earn a decisive and impressive victory. Even if it was against the lowly Sabres.

"It really helps," Berube said of the win. "Even though we played well against Boston and St. Louis, we lost in shootouts. It was important I think for the confidence level, to get the guys' spirits back up."

Quoted

"Every game is important. You have to worry who you're playing but you have to worry about yourself, too."
